Florida International University is sponsoring a contest for university students in Florida, the Caribbean and Latin America to write plans for an international business. FIU’s College of Business Administration and its College of Engineering are organizing the Howard J. Leonhardt New Venture Challenge, hoping to “encourage the formation of interdisciplinary student teams comprised of engineering, computer science and business students,” said Joyce J. Elam, the business school’s dean.

The contest is open to undergraduate and graduate students at accredited colleges or universities in Florida, the Caribbean or Latin America. Completed applications are due no later than Nov. 22. Business plans and submission forms are due by Jan. 24.
